

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The United Nations Association in Canada acknowledges the following individuals and organizations that have given valuable assistance and direction in the development of this publication to mark the 50th Anniversary of UN Peacekeeping.

First and foremost, acknowledgement and gratitude are extended to Kristine St-Pierre, our lead researcher and writer. Kristine's commitment, thoughtfulness, diligence, professionalism and skill ensured this extraordinary "traveling seminar" leaves a useful legacy, and for that UNA-Canada is very thankful for having her on board this ambitious project.

A special thanks also goes to Maria Banda, a young Canadian who has had her Rhodes Scholarship extended into a DPhil at Oxford University. Her paper on Responsibility to Protect provides a useful map for civil society, governments, and others to move the R2P agenda forward. It can be found on the UNA-Canada website, and it will most definitely contribute to R2P's consolidation as an advocacy tool for civil society.

Various people contributed to the framing of these roundtables, the organization and logistics across the 10 provinces, reporting after each meeting, as well as background research, editing and feedback, which deserve to be acknowledged here.

Robert O'Brien, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Association of Veterans in UN Peacekeeping, served as a program manager for the 50th Anniversary of UN Peacekeeping project for six months. His good humour, exceptional logistical abilities, and thoughtful contributions were welcomed. As a former UN peacekeeper, he contributed an important veteran's voice to the findings and recommendations of this report.

Local partners for the events were: UNA-Canada St. John's Branch, Past president, Bob Olivero; University of King's College School of Journalism, Director, Kim Kierans; Queen's Centre for International Relations in Kingston, Director, Charles Pentland; UNA-Canada Edmonton Branch, President, Chaldeans Mensah; UNA-Canada Quebec City Branch, President, Marc Perron; UNA-Canada Winnipeg Branch, President, Ashok Athavale; UNA-Canada Vancouver Branch, President, Patsy George; Forum on Children and Armed Conflict, CPCC, Coordinator, Kathy Vandergrift; and University of Victoria, Political Science Department, Michael Webb.

Local liaisons were individuals based in each city who acted as the focal person to implement the event, assisting in the logistics, identification of local participants, as well as undertaking local communications. UNA-Canada is immensely grateful to the local partners and liaisons for their on-the-ground assistance with each local event: Bob Olivero (St. John's); Brent Butcher (Halifax); Nicole Waintraub (Kingston); Joy Fraser (Edmonton); Daniel Atangana (Quebec City); James Johnston (Winnipeg); Dr. Michael

Webb (Victoria); Lisa Mighton (Vancouver); Nicole Adoranti (Toronto); Jennifer Adams, Plan Canada (Toronto).

The writing of this report would have been impossible without the ten skilled rapporteurs who brought together the comments, findings and recommendations from the roundtables and public dialogues. A special thanks to following rapporteurs: Samantha White (St. John's); Jason Oliver (Halifax); Monica Chohan (Kingston); Tonia Anselmo (Edmonton); Vincent Sosthène Fouda (Quebec City); Jodi Alderson (Winnipeg); Michael Bloomfield (Victoria); Lisa Mighton and Janine Edgerton-McGhan (Vancouver); Kathy Vandergrift (Toronto); and Marja Hughes (Ottawa).

In addition, the following individuals contributed their exceptional moderating skills to the roundtables and public events, ensuring a coherent and well structured discussion at each event. UNA-Canada thanks the following individuals who acted as moderators: Dave Perry (closed roundtable) and Kim Kierans (public dialogue), Halifax; Ambassador (ret'd) Louis Delvoie (roundtable) and Jane Boulden (public dialogue), Kingston; Bob O'Brien (roundtable), Edmonton; Julie Gagné (roundtable) and Marc Perron (public dialogue), Quebec City; Shannon Sampert (roundtable), Winnipeg; Michael Webb (roundtable), Victoria; Kathryn Gretsinger (both roundtable and public dialogue), Vancouver; Kathy Vandergrift (both roundtable and public dialogue), Toronto; Justin Trudeau (high school debate on Darfur) and Kate White (public dialogue on R2P), Ottawa.

The acknowledgements would not be complete without thanking the many distinguished participants who gave informative and thought provoking panel presentations at the public dialogues (listed in Annex 1) and the hundreds of key experts and stakeholders who attended the roundtables (listed in Annex 2). In addition, we wish to thank the members of the general public who attended the public events, asking insightful questions and providing useful comments on the presentations, which were worked into the findings and recommendations of this report.

Thank you to all of the countless other interns, volunteers, and supportive staff at UNA-Canada, especially Rebecca Cohn and Jason Oliver, Communications Officers, Amy Brathwaite, Project Officer, Rebecca Smith, Consultant, for their support for organizing, logistics and communication surrounding the events.

This ambitious project to mark the 50th Anniversary of UN peacekeeping was made possible thanks to the very generous support by a number of concerned partners. These include the Canadian International Development Agency, Veterans Affairs Canada, Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, the Department of National Defence Security and Defence Forum, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the local branches of UNA-Canada. This partnership enabled Canadians to consider together how they and the UN continue to work towards peace, as Lester B. Pearson did through his modest proposal fifty years ago.
